

a right to propose amendments and negatives. Bi infallibly end in a right of origination. 4. Perhaps make a declaration of rights. It will be attempte Two other objects will be attempted, viz., a habeas * and a free press. But probably they may not obtai the first session, or with modification only, and the n; be left to ripen itself more for their unlimited adopti the whole, it has appeared to me that the basis of t struggle is an illumination of the public mind as to of the nation, aided by fortunate incidents; that they retrograde, but from the natural progress of things, forward to the establishment of a constitution whic sure them a good degree of liberty. They flatter they shall form a better constitution than the English it will be better in some points, worse in others. It wi in the article of representation, which will be more will be worse, as their situation obliges them to ki dangerous machine of a standing-army. I doubt, to they will obtain the trial by jury, because they are n of its value. (To Dr. Price, written in Paris, 178

553-557-)

FRENCH REVOLUTION.—I am looking ardently to 1 tion of the glorious work in which your country i I view the general condition of Europe as hangi success or failure of France. Having set such an < philosophical arrangement within, I hope it will exte your limits also, to your dependents and to your every part of the earth. (To the Marquis de Conde F.V., 379.)

FRENCH REVOLUTION.—I still hope the French rev( issue happily. I feel that the permanence of our o\ some degree on that, and that failure there would be argument to prove a failure here. (To Edward Rtitl< F.

V., 3770

FRENCH REVOLUTION.—The French Revolution steadily, and is, I think, beyond the danger of accidei kind. The success of that will ensure the progress